

Construction: Litigation, Arbitration and Mediation

The Fowler White Boggs Products Liability Group supports the Construction Industry Team by representing matters involving defective products that may cause a wrongful death, personal injury, or property damage. The case may involve claims against a product manufacturer, distributor or retailer. It may also involve lessors or renters of the product or suppliers of component parts of the products. This Group is experienced in all areas of Products Liability Law, including toxic torts, or cases where it is alleged that exposure to a chemical may have caused injury. The Group handles cases involving consumer products; medical devices; drugs; agricultural, industrial and household chemicals; automobiles; automotive components; tires; indoor and outdoor power tools; weapons; appliances; boats; paints; solvents; construction materials; ladders; scaffolds; material-handling equipment and other types of industrial equipment.

We represent public and private owners, construction and design professionals, manufacturers, materialmen, suppliers, sureties and insurers. Our attorneys are recognized as leaders in the industry, with clients, matters and businesses throughout Florida and the Southeastern United States.

The Firm also represents clients in the litigation, arbitration and mediation of a wide range of construction-related disputes pertaining to public and private works. We have resolved issues pertaining to bid protests, contract defaults, professional liability, construction defects, extra work claims, changed condition claims, delay claims, mechanic's liens and stop notice claims, surety bond claims and homeowner association claims, among others.

Practice Team

Mark C. Anderson
William M. Dillon
Conrad J. Lazo